LIST OF REPORTS AND PUBLICATIONS FOR ECOLOGICAL RESERVES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

FOREWORD

Ecological reserves are created not only to conserve representative and/or unique ecosystems of British Columbia, but to offer long-term research and educational opportunities. Since 1971 when the first ecological reserves were created in British Columbia, a substantial number of research projects have been completed.

This list of reports and publications is but a first attempt at documenting the research being carried out in existing (ER) and proposed (ERP) ecological reserves. The list is preliminary and no doubt contains errors and omissions in spite of our efforts; it will be up-dated periodically. We would appreciate receiving any additional references which you feel are pertinent.

References with a full number (i.e. 4, or 52-17) are filed in this office. We are attempting to obtain copies of those references with a parenthesis in their report number (i.e. 52-(28)). References not given a number were included as pertinent as they could be useful to researchers planning to do research in a reserve; however we will not be obtaining copies of these reports.

The B.C. ecological reserves system, although far from complete, now contains 115 reserves and offers unparalleled research opportunities. We hope that this list of reports and publications will prove useful to researchers in this province and elsewhere, and encourage more research.
